Chicago Police Officers Save Elderly Mans Life

Quick acting officers are able to revive man after performing CPR

CHICAGO – On March 2, 2015, at approximately 4:45 p.m., two Chicago Police officers responded to an EMS call of a “male not breathing” in the 7100 block of South Marshfield.

When the officers arrived on the scene they were met by the victim’s distraught family members who stated that the victim was not breathing. The officers immediately took control of the situation and placed the 67 year-old male on the floor. One of the officers then began to administer Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation (CPR), and worked as a team to revive the victim. Chicago Fire Department arrived on the scene shortly after and transported the victim to U of C hospital where he is currently listed in stable condition.

The officers are both 2 year veterans of the Chicago Police Department. The officers currently work the 3rd watch in the Englewood (007th) District and one of the officers is CPR certified.
